NEW TRIAL FOR GARVEY.

Set Aside To-Day.

The General Term, Supreme Court, Garvey was convicted on Dec. 10, 1894, and sentenced to one year imprisonment for entering the residence of Mrs. Cath-erine Astor on Fifth avenue, and going to sleep in one of the luxuriously ap-crine Astor on Fifth avenue, and going to sleep in one of the luxuriously appointed rooms.

In the argument for Garvey, Lawyer Stayton reviewed the history of the case, paying particular attention to the verdict which found the tramp "guilty of unlawfully entering a house." No particular house was mentioned, he said, nor was it found that Garvey had entered the house with criminal intent. After the jury retired, the verdict was amended by the addition of the words, with criminal intent." On this verdict as amended, Garvey was sentenced. Nine of the jurors made affidavit that the verdict as amended was not their verdict, and that they had no intention of finding Garvey guilty of criminal intent. From these facts. Mr. Stayton said, it was clear the prisoner had been sentenced on a spurious verdict.

Justice Van Brunt delivered the opinion of the Court. He said:
"The verdict on which the prisoner was sentenced was not a true verdict. The affidavits of the jurymen were submitted not for the purpose of impeaching their finding, but to establish it, as rendered. They did not find the accused guilty of the clime charged in the indictment, but guilty of unlawfully entering a house. The statute defines what must accompany the entering of a house to constitute a crime.

"The jury did not find that the evidence justified them in entering into the question of the prisoner's intentions. The verdict is improper as recorded and the accused cannot be made to suffer for an offense of which he was not found guilty."
